

I oppose any changes to Indiana's Telephone Privacy law that would weaken it. I pay to have a telephone at my home for my personal use, not for the use of telemarketers or anyone else trying to sell me something, whether I am doing business with them or not. If these companies want the use of my phone, let them pay for it. If this law is changed, it should include the requirement that all board members of these companies have their private phone numbers made public so they can be called by me, and any other customers to ask them questions or voice their opinion on their company policies.
